Jade Taylor is in deep trouble. And not the innocent, slap on your wrist from the principal, trouble. Kidnapped by her worst enemy, she manages to escape with her life, only to discover that every criminal in Boston is out to get her after her step-brother, and not-so-secret lover, Patrick, killed one of the sons of a new Italian mob family in ‘self-defense’. Turning him over to the police means losing the love of her life, but keeping his whereabouts a secret will ultimately end in losing her dream career.

Jade is determined to find a way around this, or at least to figure out who’s after her so that she can bring the mob to justice, but new tensions between her and Patrick make matters worse and she’s sucked into his spiral of desire all over again. She’s lost in Patrick, the love which has consumed her and her sense of right and wrong. The need to find herself without him becomes so strong, that she’s tempted to push him away. Just when she thinks things can’t get any more complicated, the different factions of Boston come crashing down on her head. And a mystery enemy makes it clear that Jade is next on his hit list.
