Turning Point:

Matthew Elliot’s life is about to change. Everything he knows, everything he thought was secure, is about to get turned upside down.

Matt’s career as a narcotics detective is his entire world, and being publically outed as gay is just the beginning.

Falling in love with Kira, or Frankie, as he’s known to everyone else, is the catalyst of it all.

Matt’s life changes course, taking him to hell and back and giving him everything in return.

Book two in the Turning Point series

A fight for what's right becomes a fight for his life

As guilt plagues him, Matthew Elliott’s world begins to spiral out of control. The harder he holds on, the more it slips through his fingers, and he’s helpless to stop it.

Entering into the underground cage-fighting scene, he starts out fighting for what’s right. The deeper he gets, the more guilt consumes him—the more pain he takes for his penance—and he’s soon fighting for more than justice.

He’s fighting for love.

He’s fighting for his life.

About the Author:

I have pretty, pretty boys who live in my head, who don't let me sleep at night unless I give them life with words. I like it when they do dirty, dirty things…but I like it even more when they fall in love.
