Storytelling in Words and Pictures: How to Write Graphic Novels and Comics Janet Stone
Storytelling in Words and Pictures: How to Write Graphic Novels and Comics contains everything you need to know to create graphic stories. It can be used independently by users of all ages, especially young teens, and can be used in middle school and high school English and art classes. Its unique approach pairs writing lessons with drawing lessons. Main ideas are introduced by two teen characters who appear in graphic panels in every lesson. JumpStart activities at the end of each lesson help readers practice what they have learned.
