Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: ...John Hare "Powel," devoted much of his life to the improvement of the breed of domestic animals. Other lovers of learning appear on both sides. Hare's mother's father was a founder and trustee of the University of Pennsylvania and Hare's father also was a trustee of the University. Hare was a voluminous writer not only in science but also in pure literature. He was a versificator like his first cousin, Joseph Shippen, and wrote political pamphlets and letters to the press. His father was a member of Pennsylvania's first constitutional convention and, like his son John, speaker of the state senate. Hare's brother John also was a voluminous writer on agriculture and social topics. Hare was a hyperkinetic: enthusiastic, vivacious and agreeable in conversation, given to controversy and pressing claims on priority, rich in ideas and able to command the loyal cooperation of numerous students. In later life he departed more from the paths of inductive science showing a fondness for speculation and becoming a warm supporter of spiritualism. All of his work was marked by originality. Edgar F. Smith, 1917. The Life of Robert Hare; an American Chemist (1781-1858). Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. A ROLLING STONE. James Morris Morgan, b. in New Orleans, 1845, began his "adventures at an early age. When I could barely toddle I strayed away from the house." At 5 years his family removed to Baton Rouge, where government soldiers were stationed, and these struck his imagination. With a negro horseman as teacher he learned as a boy to lasso the wild Spanish horses which ran at large so "that 11 years afterwards I succeeded in astonishing the Bedouins of Egypt with some of my feats." Though at 14 he had never seen blue water he "longed fo...
