Holmes and Watson: The Twilight Years Ray Ziemecki
A book of four short stories.

The Adventure Of The Missing Bedilia

Watson laughed at the idea of writing this story. "It's just a bit of whimsey," he said."My readers wouldn't know what to make of my writing such a tale."
But Holmes insisted.
Thus, at Holmes's request, Watson begins this volume with a story somewhat different than any other adventure he has ever recorded.

The Adventure Of The Abracadabra Man

A young attache' returns home from abroad and lays a secret document down in his study. He leaves the room for just a moment and when he returns the document is gone. Gone, in broad daylight, with trusted family members and servants milling about. It seemed the papers had magically disappeared.
Abracadabra!

The Adventure Of Lady With Pearls

The front door and the French windows were locked and the hall door was guarded by two men. A painting of questionable value was stolen from a room the thief could not have gotten into or out of unseen, leaving behind him, untouched, a fortune in objets d'art.
Why? How?

The Adventure Of The Saintly Corse

Miss Finch was a sweet 72 year old lady, known lovingly to everyone in the village as Aunt Esther. She visited and fed the sick. Read to the children. Sang in the church choir. Helped at the church bazaar. She did whatever was needed, what ever was too much trouble or too distasteful for anyone else.
The church pastor called this penniless woman, the village treasure.
Yet, her body was found sprawled on her kitchen floor, in a pool of her own blood, savagely beaten to death with her own cast iron skillet. Her blood and brain matter were scattered everywhere.
Constable Hardwick said, "You can find a leprechaun in your teapot before you'll find a motive for this."
