The Beetle: A Mystery & A Master of Deception Richard Marsh
• This edition binds together two classic novels from horror writer Richard Marsh: The Beetle: A Mystery & A Master of Deception

The Beetle: A Mystery (1897).
A mysterious oriental person pursues a British politician to London, where he wreaks havoc with his powers of hypnosis and shape-shifting, in search of vengeance for the defilement of a sacred tomb in Egypt.
Marsh's novel was published in the same period as Bram Stoker's Dracula and like many sensational novels of the time The Beetle is narrated from the perspectives of multiple characters.
The novel uses numerous themes of the late 19th century, including unemployment and urban destitution, radical politics, homosexuality, science, and Britain's imperial engagements (in particular those in Egypt and the Sudan).

A Master of Deception (1915)
Mr. Elmore's uncle, much like his father, has committed suicide and he would like answers where none are to be found. The novel is part mystery, part romance, packed in a tightly written and witty style.
"Perhaps," said Mr. Wilkes, replying to his unspoken question, "you had better go. You will commit yourself to nothing by going."
"Whereas," observed Elmore, with his smiling glance fixed on the managing man, "you will commit yourself to a good deal by not going, because I shall not only put you out of this door, but into the street. So far as this office is concerned, that will be the end of you. I will take steps which will ensure your never entering it again."
After another brief moment of hesitation, with a glance of what was very like reproach towards the lawyer, Andrews quitted the room, with the air of one who was both bewildered and hurt.
